RUFUS CHOATE.-PINKNEY. We take the following from the address of Hon. Theophilus Parsons, before the students of Harvard Law School:-"I have said that Mr. Choate was a peculiar man, whom it was difficult to class with others. I have known but one man whom he resembled. The earliest impression he made upon, me, was from his similarity in some important points with Wm. Purkney, of Baltimore. This gentleman I had known intimately, having passed some months in his family; and during his last winter in Washington I saw him perhaps every day, from the meeting of the Senate, of which he was a member, to the hour when I stood by his death bed. I was a young man then, and I have thought that it was perhaps because I was young that Mr. Pinkney excited my admiration as he did. He certainly seemed to me the most brilliant person I had ever known; and if I did not call him the greatest advocate in the country, it was because Mr. Webster had begun to dispute the supremacy which, until then, had not been questioned. Well do I remember, and never can I forget, the last case in which these giants encountered; the last in which Pinkney appeared. Almost immediately after it, he died of apoplexy, caused, as some supposed, by his great effort to preserve that sovereignty which had been unchallenged so long .-The main question of the case related to the invention and working of certain machinery; and only genius like his own could have imparted to it a particle of interest for the common ear. But during all his long argument, the room was crowded; and about the doors were those who waited, obstinately, if not patiently, for the opportunity, which seldom occurred, when some one of the audience was called away, for no one seemed to leave the room but upon compulsion. Like others there, my ear and eye belonged, for the time being, to the orator; but I could not avoid noticing a picture which at this mo-ment I recall. In front of Pinkney sat the Supreme Court, with Marshall in the centre, and they too watched his words, and caught the treasures of law, logic and learning which dropped from his lips. But behind the orator, and at his right and left, was a mingled audience of all ages, of both sexes, of those who had come from the sexts of the highest culture this country possessed, and those whose distant homes were in the far boundaries which civilization had but just invaded-and all, all alike, sat or stood fascinated and charmed; and I use these words in their original sense, for his hearers seemed to vield themselves up to the magic of an enchanter. As I listened, I thought then, and, as I remember it, I think now, that the efforts of that day presented to me all that learning could give, and all that the severest logic could do, and all of this used and wielded with perfect skill and the most consummate rhetoric. That impression is vivid at this day. So soon after it was made as when I first knew Mr. Choate, it was uneffaced and clear; and when I left the court-

THE DEATH OF ISAMBARD BRUNEL has exeited much sympathy. The verdict on him might be, "Killed by the Great Eastern" but less by the anxiety consequent on the completion and starting of the big ship, than by the mortification and disappointment at the cost and bungling of her launching -With that daring independence, or rather defiance of settled opinion, which distinguished Brunel, he had made arrangements for tue moving of the Leviathan into the water which were in contradiction with many doc- A. R. Blakey, trines hitherto accepted as axioms in ship H. W. Thomas, launching. Mr. Scott Russell made an offer to the Company to contract for the launching for an expense of £15,000. Mr. Brunel pooh-poohed the figure, as needlessly costly. His own arrangements cost the Company close on £100,000! Yet he never swerved after once determining on his course. Audacity was one leading feature of Brunel's engineering character. I heard an anecdote which illustrates this strikingly. Brunel held views in contradiction to those of his brethren as to the employment of a peculiar kind of Roman cement, in railway bridge building. Other engineers objected to its use, as it hardened too fast to allow the work to settle properly. Not so Brunel. Trusting to his own view, he used this mortar in one of the first large bridges constructed by them for the Great Western line. It fell soon after its erection. Brunel entered the room where the directors were assembled, in discomfited conclave, to discuss the accident. "I congratulate you, gentlemen, on the fall ofbridge," was Brunel's entry on the subject. "Congratulate us! on an accident involving disaster and the loss of--pounds?" was the angry and amazed rejoinder. "Certainly," said Brunel, coolly. "I was just about to put up two hundred bridges on the same principle."

A Good RETORT .- The Richmond News says:-A lady of our acquaintance, who has sufficiently good judgment and sense not to make herself an object of particular attention by wearing immoderately large hoops, was passing up one of our principal thoroughfares, a few days since, when she was met by a young man full of bad whiskey, who was laboring very strenuously to preserve his equanimity, and prevent the discovery of his condition. In endeavoring to avoid a collision with the lady in question, he lost his balance and stepped on the skirt of her dress, when he turned towards her and remarked, by way of apology, "Hoops take up too much room." The lady looked at him, and very quietly retorted, "Not so much as whiskey, sir," and passed on.

The lot adjoins the lands of Bishop Johns, Jas. Green, and Geo. K. Witmer, and is accessible from the Turnpikes by good roads. The land is divided into four fields, and the tract is enclosed by good fencing nearly all new-that binding on the road being of the best North Carolina plank. About ten acres are well set in grass, and will yield from 6 to 8 tons of hay. The situation is elevated and healthy, with a fine grove of forest oaks covering about five acres, and there is a good spring of water on the land. The improvements consist of a two-story FRAME DWELLING, containing five rooms, and kitchen attached; also, an out-house for servants. The buildings are nearly all new, plainly and substantially built. The dwelling has a portico round it, 10 feet wide by 70 long, a good dry cellar, and is enclosed with new fencing. The grounds about the dwelling are planted with ornamental and fruit trees, which are in a thriving condition. Also, a barn, 20 by 32 feet, with floors of tongued and groved plank, extending the length of the building.
